

What if Friends don't agree?

This book belongs to:

Even the very best friends disagree sometimes. This is okay.

It is okay to say: "I think something different to you."
This is called having an opinion.

Everyone has opinions. Sometimes they are the same and sometimes they are different.

This means we do not always agree on things. This is okay. We are still friends.

We can think together to fix the problem. We may need an adult's help to do this. This is okay.

This may mean sharing, taking turns or waiting.

sharing	An illustration showing two hands, one light-skinned and one dark-skinned, holding a green, heart-shaped object together. This represents the concept of sharing.
taking turns	An illustration of two children, a boy in a blue shirt and a girl in a pink dress, standing on either side of a red ball. They appear to be playing together, representing taking turns.
waiting	An illustration of a person standing at a bus stop, looking towards the right. This represents the concept of waiting.

I can be respectful of other people's opinions - even when they are not the same as mine

Everyone has opinions and this is okay.
